KTVU
PROBLEMS & NEEDS REPORT
FIRST QUARTER 2011

Report Summary

The following topics are issues of special concern to the residents of the nine San Francisco Bay Area Counties:

San Bruno Pipeline Explosion

In September of last year, a huge explosion ripped through a residential neighborhood of San Bruno killing eight people and destroying 38 homes. The explosion came from a PG&E gas pipeline. KTVU covers the investigation into the cause of the explosion and the ongoing question of whether PG&E is to blame or not. Pipeline testing, pressure spikes and bad welds were some of the issues covered. Compensation for the families affected and for their homes was covered, plus delays in receiving compensation and the distribution of donated monies. The NTSB, PUC and the CPUC were some of the agencies involved in the matter.

Federal investigators are calling on PG&E to find and fix other potentially faulty gas lines before they explode...like the one in San Bruno. The NTSB issued seven recommendations today, six of them are labeled "urgent." Eight people died in this neighborhood, fifty homes were destroyed or damaged. Survivors welcome the reforms, but note they come too late. Investigators found the burst pipe was welded, not seamless, as records showed. Now PG&E is being told to look for other vulnerable lines, and do it now. Congresswoman Jackie Speier calls it a crisis of credibility for PG&E. The NTSB recommends that many questionable gas lines be out through high pressure water testing, even though it's costly and disrupts service. And the board wants word to spread nationwide, warning other utilities this could happen to them too. PG&E says even without the NTSB, it is reviewing its pipeline records, but can't talk about a timetable, results or any testing so far. The NTSB also said it is urgent the state PUC...the "watchdog," watch PG&E better. In two months, the full board will hold a hearing in Washington, into the explosion here and how pipeline safety might be improved across the country.

Federal regulators warned all natural gas pipeline operators today to make sure they have accurate records...and to cut pressure if they don't. The bulletin is in response to the federal report two days ago on the PG&E pipeline disaster in San Bruno. It found PG&E had erroneous records about the high pressure gas line. Federal officials said all companies should reduce pressure by 20% if problems are discovered.

San Bruno city officials heard from some unhappy residents tonight about what hasn't happened with their donations to the pipeline explosion victims. The meeting was intended to take suggestions from the public on the best use of the money. About $380,000 was donated. Several people said they were upset their donation had not been given out. City officials explained they have never dealt with a situation like this. And it appeared the victims were being taken care of by the Red Cross and PG&E. It will be up to the San Bruno City Council to decide how to distribute the money.

1/9/11 All Newscasts 2:05

There had been complaints from some people in that devastated neighborhood that the city was taking too long to decide how the money should be distributed, but tonight, with very little debate, the city council approved a three pint plan. The owners of each of the 38 homes destroyed will receive $6,000 each, home with moderate damage will get $4,000 and homes with minor damage will receive $1,000. The city is also setting aside $58,000 of the funds to be distributed on the basis of extreme and unexpected needs. The money will be ready for distribution by the end of this week and some homeowners we talked to tonight said they hope they can start rebuilding their homes and lives as soon as possible.

1/9/11 All Newscasts :25

A new report on questions whether a pressure test on a PG&E pipeline caused the San Bruno pipeline explosion. In September last year, the explosion killed eight people and destroyed 38 homes. The San Francisco Chronicle reports that two years ago, PG&E raised the pressure in that line to the maximum allowable under law. Experts wonder if that test weakened the line. One called it a huge gamble. PG&E denies the increased pressure caused the problems.

1/13/11 All Newscasts :29

Sparks flew at today's meeting of the California Public Utilities Commission. The panel heard from lawmakers and public interest groups on the subject of September's deadly natural gas pipeline explosion in San Bruno. One assemblyman was highly critical of the commission's president, who used to be President of Southern California Edison. Governor Jerry Brown will soon be able to appoint as many as three new commissioners. Watchdog groups say that could focus more attention on the way PG&E does business.

2/20/11 All Newscasts :30

PG&E may have violated federal regulations when it spiked pressure in the San Bruno pipeline. According to t report in today's San Francisco Chronicle, officials said the spikes were illegal and that utility should have inspected for damage afterward. PG&E has admitted to spiking the San Bruno pipeline twice, in 2003 and 2008. But it told the paper that temporary pressure increases were safe and legal. Federal investigators suspect a bad weld ruptured on the pipeline caused September's deadly explosion.

2/20/11 All Newscasts :31

The state agency that oversees PG&E is making new efforts to reach out to customers. Commissioner Mike Florio, one of Governor Brown's appointees to the CPUC is conducting a "listing tour" to hear complaints and concerns directly from the public. Florio's tour started in San Francisco and will continue through April. He said it's clear the CPUC has hard work to do. The Public Utilities Commission is leading the state investigation of the San Bruno disaster. It recently ordered PG&E to reduce pressure on four gas pipelines.

During the past quarter, KTVU broadcast programming that was responsive to community issues. Due to the extensive amount of such programming, the issues and programs list contains only a portion of the locally produced, issue responsive programming actually broadcast by KTVU.

Palo Alto-based Facebook, could soon be making a "status" update. Today, the city's mayor told us the company is looking for more space for its' corporate headquarters. Mayor Pat Burt says Facebook could need more than a million square feet of office space. That's something that's not available at its' business in Stanford Research Park. Sun Microsystem's former headquarters in Menlo Park is a possibility. And there could be even bigger changes for the social networking website. According to published reports today, Goldman Sachs and a Russian firm are investing $500 in Facebook. It could be one step in taking the company public.

The choice of San Francisco to host the America's Cup sailing regatta in 2013 was cause for celebration this afternoon. America's Cup winner and Oracle CEO Larry Ellison and Mayor Gavin Newsom descended the Rotunda steps at SF City Hall for the ceremony, with the giant trophy prominently displayed. The race is expected to f=draw 10 million visitors to the Bay Area and racing teams from more than a dozen countries. Ellison's team has agreed to make $55 million in improvement to the waterfront. In return, the city made concessions, including allowing Ellison to purchase, rather than lease a two-acre waterfront site for condo development. Ellison said he wanted to hold the race in San Francisco instead of Newport, Rhode Island, but needed assurances that the infrastructure could be built in time. So now the work begins and officials estimate the race could have a $1 billion dollar impact to the region.

A number of drivers in the Bay Area have ordered the new electric powered Nissan Leaf, but many are still waiting for their car to arrive from the factory. The first cars were supposed to reach the Bay Are in mid-December, but so far, only a handful of the hundreds of drivers who've ordered the 41,000 cars have been able to drive them home. Industrial analysts say it's unclear why the rollout is running behind. Some believe Nissan may be doing additional quality control testing, while others suspect production delays are due to the car's high the batteries.

Travelers get ready to pay more for your next flight...several airlines are raising their fares. Most of the increases range between four and ten dollars per round trip based on the length of the flight. It appears Southwest Airlines set the hikes in motion. Southwest said the higher fares will help offset higher fuel and operating costs. But one airfare analyst said he believes it has more to do with the restricted supply of seats as well as fuel costs.

New federal figures released today show the demand for labor fell in November. That means there will be fewer job openings than expected...making it harder for millions of unemployed people to get re-hired. Still, one hopeful note seems to be the number of people losing jobs appears to have tapered off. Cynthia Humphries' job is to find people jobs. But until now, the 54-year-old recruiter feared her own position might be eliminated. Economists say fewer employees are worried about losing their jobs these days...because most companies have stopped cutting staff. Consumer confidence is on the rise and the more confidence...the more sales. More profits spur hiring. The director of the Center for Continuing Study of the California Economy says the economy is growing...but slowly. And there are new numbers on wage increases. The numbers are for last year's second quarter and show Santa Clara County with the largest gain in the nation. San Francisco and San Mateo Counties were also in the top ten. Stephen Levy credits that to growth at Google, Facebook and Apple.

In San Francisco tonight, a beloved fixture on Fisherman's Wharf faces an uncertain future. The Alioto Fish Company has served customers there for the past 70 years, but now the owners have suddenly closed its' doors. The owner told us that the crane over there is a part of the Exxon Mobil contamination cleanup project that has caused problems from day one. According to the owner, the noise and fumes coming from a nearby contamination cleanup site is unbearable during the day. Cincotti told us she suffered an asthma attack and that two family members were also sickened, since the cleanup started right after Christmas. After putting up with the commotion for ten days, her family decided to close the Dungeness Crab and fresh seafood wholesaler temporarily starting today. Port officials say they are surprised by the closure. The cleanup project is the result of a lawsuit filed by the city against Exxon Mobil for contaminated water and soil, where it once maintained fuel storage tanks. The family says it won't re-open until the project is completed, which the Port says lily will be next month.

There's word tonight U.C. Berkeley plans to lay off almost 150 employees...most before June. The Contra Costa Times is reporting about 130 more positions will be lost through retirements or voluntarily departures. The University expects the cuts to save about $20 million. There are no plans to cut and faculty positions.

1/15/11 All Newscasts :25

The owners of the Oakland A's says he's interested in buying two parcels of land in the South Bay...that could be key to moving the A's to San Jose. Lew Wolff confirmed he may acquire the land that the San Jose Redevelopment Agency is selling. The agency is selling the land to buy other land it needs to complete a proposed downtown ballpark site. If Wolff does buy the parcels of land, the price tag could be as much as $20 million.

New numbers out tonight show California's jobless rate moving in the wrong direction. The unemployment rate hit 12.5% in December...it had been 12.4 the previous month. In fact, the jobless rate in California topped 12% through all of last year. In the Bay Area, Solano, Contra Costa and Alameda Counties have the highest unemployment...while San Francisco and Marin have the lowest. David Knapp, VP of Robert Half International, a job placement firm for professionals, says job seekers should focus on sectors that have growing demand.

More restaurants could be coming to San Francisco neighborhood that's has a ban on new eating establishments for more than 20 years. Competition could be coming quickly to the Upper Fillmore as city officials consider repealing a 1980's ordinance that blocks new restaurants that opening up here. The ban was originally meant to prevent eateries from drawing too much traffic to the district and squeezing out other types of businesses. The Golden Gate Restaurant Association says the ban instead only benefitted landlords. Dines said more foot or auto traffic here may not be a bad thug, if it brings more cuisine and cash into the neighborhood. The full board of supervisors may vote on lifting the restaurant ban in March. Even if it's repealed, chain restaurants, such as Chili's or TGI Fridays will still be banned in the upper Fillmore.

The FDIC closed a Bay Area bank today. Charter Oak Bank has two branches in Napa. It is the 21st institution to fail nationwide so far this year...and the second in California. Bank of Marin will assume all of the deposits and the Charter Oaks Bank will re-open Tuesday...as branches of Bank of Marin. The FDIC says customers of Charter Oak Bank can still access their money by writing checks or using ATM and debit cards. Checks will be processed and loan customers should continue to make payments as usual.

2/22/11 All Newscasts 2:00

It's an odd situation. Video rental company Blockbuster is closing Bay Area stores. Employees will lose their jobs. But the company won't talk about it. The company filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection last September. It had 3000 stores nationwide and closed 60 last year and plans to shutter another 180 stores during the first quarter of this year. Several Blockbuster employees told us they hope to be transferred to other stores, but say they haven't been told if they'll have jobs. Customers we spoke with say they prefer coming into the store, rather than subscribing to Netflix...a key factor in the Blockbuster decline. In addition to the Geary Street store, Blockbuster will be closing its' Church Street and Slot locations. All three stores told us everything will go on sale Friday.

The Santa Clara City Council is meeting tonight in hopes of convincing Governor Brown to preserve $40 million in state funding for a new stadium for the SF 49ers. Last year, Santa Clara County voters approved the stadium project by a 58% vote and authorized the spending of up to $40 million in redevelopment agency money. But now, the Governor is proposing doing away with redevelopment agencies. The 49ers say they could look elsewhere for funding and that they still have other options. The Mayor of Santa Clara says at this point, there is no Plan B...should the development money be taken away.

Imagine walking by your favorite store and someone taps on your shoulder to offer you a coupon or tell you which items "inside" are on sale now. Well, something similar is now a reality. Starting today, when you walk or drive by a particular store...you'll now be able to get those store's offers sent directly to your phone. Today, San Francisco joined New York, L.A. and Chicago as the first cities be part of what will eventually be a nationwide text advertising program. You enter your phone number on AT&T's web site...and when you are within one mile of a participating store, you'll get a text telling you about sales and new items. So far, KMart, JetBlue and Hewlett Packard are among the companies that have signed on. This technology will work with any AT&T phone, not just smart phones, because it uses cell towers. But some say there is already enough advertising.

A small victory tonight for those who object to a proposed anti-gang injunction in Oakland. The city already has one such injunction in effect targeting members of a North Oakland gang. Limiting where they can gather and with whom they can associate. Oakland's city attorney is seeking a second gang injunction for the Fruitvale District. That proposed injunction took center stage tonight at city hall. 40 alleged gang members here in Oakland's Fruitvale District are the next target. This man supports anything to make the streets safer. But tonight, critics called for and end to the pursuit of an injunction for the Fruitvale District. Opponents argue police already have the tools they need...that injunctions don't work and are a waste of resources. The assistant police chief say's it's been money well spent. Mayor Jean Quan has yet to take a stand on injunctions.

A big turn out tonight for a community meeting in Palo Alto. Police hosted a forum to talk about a frightening string of armed robberies. Police told us there have been 20 armed robberies in the past four months. Some victims have been approached as they were getting out of their vehicles. Tonight, we spoke with one victim who told us she and a friend were robbed in front of her home here on Marion Avenue. Investigators say they've solved six of the robberies and have arrested eight people. Now, they're trying to determine if a ring of thieves is involved. Investigators say victims often make the mistake of calling family members before calling police. At tonight's meeting, police gave out pamphlets containing safety tips. Investigators are urging people to look out for suspicious activity and report it right away.

The FAA reported dozens of laser strikes at Bay Area airports last year. There were 80 at San Jose Airport...tying it for third-most in the country. Oakland has had 55 and San Francisco reported 39. It's a violation of federal law to shine a laser at a plane. Bay Area pilots are reporting an alarming increase in the number of incidents, where someone on the ground has pointed a laser at them. It's a dangerous situation. The tactical flight crew of the Santa Clara County Sheriff's Department says its helicopter has had many laser hits. As reported incidents increase, agencies elsewhere are following the lead of Bay Area law enforcement by using night vision goggles. Bay Area agencies formed the "Laser Working Group" to share information. Officers say they hope with all the attention on lasers, even with reported incidents going up, so will arrests and convictions.

Problem solving officers with the Oakland police Department are back on the streets. Budget cuts forced the city to eliminate the community policing program last summer. The program was re-established this week. Tonight, a department spokeswoman told us it didn't hire any new officers, but reassigned 57 from within the force. About half of them are former problem solving officers.

New outreach workers are canvassing East Oakland tonight, fighting violence the best way they know; person to person. They're not cops, they're not armed. The windbreakers they wear won't stop a bullet. But they walk some of the meanest streets of Oakland trying to make a difference. They call themselves OG's and YG's...Old Gangsters and Young Gansters and tonight, they're paired up to do what many probably never envisioned: try to talk people out of the life they once led. The workers offer young people from the flatlands friendship, concern and job leads. Gang related shootings have killed more than a dozen young people in this New Year. Team members go in after police, to deal with the needs of the families and witnesses and diffuse retaliation.

Police officers tonight are facing an unusual new threat on the streets, the threat involves guns that look like toy guns. Handguns, rifles, even shotguns come in variety of designs today, with some colors aimed at female gun owners. But there are downsides to colorful guns. These are the guns Pleasant Hill Police Chief Pete Dunbar is talking about. The Oakland Police Officer's Association has been warning its' members about this deceptive threat. The officer might look at the colorful weapon and think it's a toy in the hands of the suspect. Back at Canyon Sports, owner Ron Kennedy said he doubts the painted guns are a serious threat.

Oakland will soon have some police officers back on the streets...who had been laid off. The mayor made the announcements today. There are some touted changes in the works that are pleasing the police chief. In what appeared to be a united front, Oakland's mayor, police chief and two members of the city council held a press conference today, they discussed how they can all work together in support of the police force. To do that, the mayor said she will look into applying for a federal police grant and may ask for a parcel tax to be added to a special election later this year. City officials say it may be weeks before any of the police officers are back on the streets. There are 80 in all told and the 10 being brought back will be rehired by seniority. Still...the mayor hopes this will give officers a sense of stability. Four officers were promoted to sergeant over the weekend, to provide more supervision on the street. The city will also dedicate I.T. experts to work solely for the OPD and the city will work to get newer police cars. The chief says all this is a step in the right direction. But when asked if it's enough for him to remain as Oakland's top cop, this was his reaction. He said he will meet with city leaders this week to re-establish relationships. And if all goes well, he will announce very soon if he plans to stay in Oakland or seek work elsewhere.

When gunfire erupted inside a Richmond church last year, the community took a stand. Tonight, KTVU shows us if their renewed commitment to end the violence has paid off. The early Sunday service at Richmond's New Gethsemane Church was filled with hope and joy. A far cry from Valentine's Day last year, when three gunmen opened fire injuring two teenage brothers. That brazen attack spawned a huge effort from hundreds of church leaders and other residents. Last year, there were 21 homicides in Richmond, less than half the previous year. And while last January, there were five killings in the first month and a half of this year...there has only been one. At Independent Community Church, Pastor Raymond Landry has been helping lead the struggle here to end crime and violence. Pastor Landry credits the faith community's efforts. But he says the drop in crime comes also because of strong leadership from the city, community policing and numerous groups that offer programs for young people.

Tomorrow evening, the San Francisco Police Commission is scheduled to vote on the controversial issue of bringing tasers to the department. San Francisco's interim Police Chief Jeff Godown told KTVU earlier this month that he believes tasers can be a useful tool for officers. Godown said that three recent officer involved shootings reinforce his belief in the usefulness of tasers. Last year, the Police Commission voted 4-3 against a similar proposal, but since then, some members have left and others have come on board.

Two Bay Area neighborhoods have made a nationwide "top ten" list of places where cars are most likely to be stolen. If you park your in this West Oakland Neighborhood around Adeline and Mandela Parkway, there is a one in seven chance that your car will be stolen...according to the research group Neighborhoodscout. The area ranks third in the nation for car theft. Another Bay Area neighborhood is also in the top ten. That technology-based neighborhood in North San Jose is around Zanker Road and Tasman Drive. Park your car here and you have a one in eleven chance of it being stolen. San Jose Police say car theft is not limited to this neighborhood, but it is a citywide problem. They say older Toyotas, Hondas, Mazdas and Nissans are the sot common targets. Police say alarms and steering wheel locks can be a deterrent, but the number one reason for car thefts is people leaving their cars running unattended.

Hundreds of people rallied tonight at the University of San Francisco. They're upset that the campus FM radio station was sold this week without warning. Supporters of radio station KUSF marched across campus tonight to confront the university president over his decision to sell the station. Workers and listeners say they're especially outraged that the station was shut down with no warning. USF's president said he couldn't talk about the impending sale because negotiations included non-disclosure terms. And he said the radio station wasn't fulfilling the school's primary mission of educating students. The station will continue online, with its' format of Indie Rock, foreign language and arts programming. But critics say that will not help listeners who don't have internet access. Today, the University of Southern California issued a statement saying it had purchased the rights to KUSF to air classical music...the selling price $3.75 million dollars. KUSF supporters say they haven't given up...they'll next petition the FCC to try to block the sale.

The Mt. Diablo School Board says it needs to save $1.5 million dollars. It says declining enrollment and state budget cuts make the closures necessary. Tonight, the board debated the possibility of taking three schools off the chopping block...a way to move the process forward, but instead, decided to stick with the program and let a crowd of parents and children have their say. An estimated 200 people attended the meeting...waiting for insight into which schools might close. Some parents said they are frustrated by massive amounts of information about the process, but not enough practical information about practical matters. There are three different scenarios...each involving the elimination of three schools. One of the least supported options involves closing the three highest performing schools or choice schools. A final decision on school closure is expected February 8th.

Tomorrow in Oakland, several schools will be starting a new program called "Text a Tip." It's a way to help keep campuses safer through texting, and what's interesting, is that the idea came from the National Football League. The program allows students and community members to alert campus police directly about potential problems. It's an idea the district police chief borrowed from Sports. The program will begin tomorrow at Oakland Tech and five other high schools in the city. Many students say it's a good idea...others wonder if it will work. One student said they wouldn't want to run the risk of being known as a tattletale.. Parents say they support the idea, but have questions. Chief Sarna says the service will cost about $2,000 a year and in the future, they hope to expand it to other schools in the district.

Resistance to PG&E's so-called "Smart Meters" is heating up in the North Bay. Today, a 61 year old grandmother spent six hours in jail after blocking a truck carrying the devices in Rohnert Park. Deborah Tavares and a second woman from Novato were arrested by the Rohnert Park Police this morning. They and a dozen other protestors blocked a semi-truck delivering Smart Meters to a company that installs them for PG&E. The meters are part of an international conversion to a "smart grid," in which power use can be measured and controlled by radio frequency. But critics are convinced that the pulses radiating from the meters are safe for long term exposure. They want the ability to "opt out," and they are becoming more vocal, blocking installers, packing public meetings, and last month shutting down PG&E's San Rafael office for several hours by blocking the entrance. Tavares urges other utility customers to resist installation until their doubts are satisfied. She notes, many people aren't aware, that after the meters come smaller outlets, and smaller appliances...all mandatory. PG&E continues to insist that Smart Meters are a safe and reliable improvement over the old meters.

Bay Bridge drivers will notice that the new tower is nearing its final height. KTVU's consumer editor has been following the construction since the beginning and in tonight's update, explains just how delicate and difficult this work is. Each column will take thirty hours to install...ten hours of that is just to slowly lift the 105 foot columns four hundred feet into the air, placed atop the other tiers already in place, then in Early April...the crown. When completed in 2013, there will be no road collapse as we saw in the quake of '89. Even in the largest credible quake, the bridge is designed to suffer minimal damage and be back in full service quickly.

California homeowners will have the opportunity to get up to $4,000 in rebates if they make significant energy upgrades. The goal of the $300 million dollar energy program is to reduce energy, save money and create jobs. Homeowners have to take the first step and pay for the upgrades themselves before they are eligible for rebates. It's called "Energy Upgrade California," and you can find the details on KTVU's website.

The City of Oakland has a new mayor tonight. Jean Quan is Oakland's 49th mayor and first woman mayor and its first Asian mayor. Quan said her priority is to improve the lives of the children in Oakland; because that will help all residents. She spoke about her own childhood growing up in Oakland's Chinatown in a family that arrived here 104 years ago. Earlier, Quan led her supporters on a walking tour...tracing her family's roots from Chinatown to the Fox Theater, where show was sworn in. If Mayor Quan's first day on the job is any indication, she is going to be a much different mayor than Ron Dellums. While the Dellums camp tightly restricted access, Mayor Quan opened up City Hall to the general public tonight, including her office. Quan's ascent from school board to city council to the mayor's office is historically significant. Quan started her first day as mayor by calling for 2000 volunteers to help the city tackle its' problems and city workers started recruiting those volunteers at the open house. They signed up 100's of potential volunteers.

He's back. A generation ago, when Jerry Brown first became governor, he championed fiscal restraint. Tonight, Brown is California's governor once again...following a "no frills" inauguration at the state capitol. Thousands attended, including outgoing Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger. Afterwards, supporters threw a party and served hot dogs. Then, this evening, there was an inaugural reception. In his inaugural speech, Brown talked about the $28 billion dollar deficit. He plans to introduce a budget next Monday. The new governor is 72 years old. He said at this stage of his life, he has not come to Sacramento to embrace delay and denial. He capped it off with a familiar refrain, California here I come, right back where I started from.

California's landmark law restricting property tax is getting a fresh look in Sacramento. Governor Brown is talking about it out loud...something politicians tend not to do. However, he's not exactly saying what, if anything should be done about it. Just hours into his first full day of office, Governor Jerry Brown danced around a political third rail; Proposition 13, which he said unintentionally consolidated power in Sacramento. Brown said he wants to shift the power form the state to local government. The governor has not said he intends to seek a change in Prop. 13's property tax restrictions. Supporters of Prop. 13 say if it were on the ballot today, voters would approve it by a large margin. And the chief advocate of 13, the Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association says it doesn't see Brown's comments as an assault on that landmark law. Governor Brown's budget plan and details will be revealed Monday.

The deal is all but done, late today, San Francisco's Board of Supervisors selected City Administrator Ed Lee to serve the final year of Mayor Gavin Newsom's last term. Right now, Lee is out of the country on vacation. But when he returns, he is spoiled to become the city's first Asian mayor. The vote for Ed Lee was 10-1. Those who said yeah, touted his experience and heritage. Dissenting Supervisor Chris Daly, he said he believes the powerful SF Chinese community leader pulled off a big time chess move...convincing a man who was reluctant to be interim mayor to take the job, and then selling the idea to those inside City Hall. Supervisors called this a historic day for the Chinese community and for all of SF. The new Board of Supervisors will be sworn in tomorrow and is expected to ratify today's vote for Ed Lee on Tuesday.

We begin tonight with a major shakeup at San Francisco's Hall of Justice. A move that caught just about everyone by surprise...the city police chief has stepped down to become the interim District Attorney. That leaves the police department with a new chief...who may not be there long. Gascon was the city's police chief from 2009 until this afternoon. The former chief, who is also a lawyer, is now the city's first ever Latino D.A. One big difference between Gascon's administration and that of former DA Kamala Harris is that Harris refused to seek the death penalty, even in the case of a cop killer. Gascon says he will run for re-election in the fall.

Hundreds of people gathered tonight in the Rotunda of San Francisco's City Hall this afternoon for a history-making swearing-in ceremony. Former city administrator Ed Lee, took the oath as interim mayor and became the city's first Chinese American to do so. Many people are calling it a new day here in city hall. The mayor told us he plans to hit the ground running tomorrow and start tackling a $360 million budget deficit and hiring a new police chief. He says he's honored to become the city's first Chinese mayor, but he is a mayor for all people. With Asians making up 31% of the city's population, community leaders say there is a strong sense of pride. Lee describes himself as once being anti-establishment when he started his career as a civil rights lawyer working for the Asian Law Caucus. Now he says he's working with the establishment to open doors for everyone.

The final candidate for the San Jose Police Chief's job has been a San Jose cop for 29 years...and depending on who you talk to...that is either an assets or liability. San Jose's City Manager said she made her decision yesterday, but would not name her final choice. But, acting Police Chief Chris Moore is the only remaining candidate. The 49 year old Moore is an insider. he has a law degree. He was a White House Fellow and a Fulbright Scholar. He is an acknowledged international expert in police ethics. But Moore must lead a department depleted by budget cuts and distrusted by some in the community for aggressive street policing and racial profiling. There was an echoing call of a need for change and an inside candidate may not embody the change that the community is calling for. The president of the local chapter of the NAACP calls the city manager's choice, "business as usual." The city council meets on Tuesday in closed session to either confirm or reject the new police chief.

Like cancer itself, treatment is often a matter of chance. A new, non-invasive test could take the guesswork out of the equation. Long before any of us get a cancer tumor, cancer cells circulate in our blood. Scientists say a new test can scan billions of blood cells and find a single cancer cell. Johnson & Johnson today announced a collaboration to bring this lab on a chip to market. The American Cancer Society called it a breakthrough that has far-reaching, but still unconfirmed implications. At Alta Bates Medical Center, Oncologist Tom Lee says the tests usefulness must still be proven in clinical trials. Johnson & Johnson researchers say the test may be most useful after treatment. Researchers say the test could find any cancer cells that break out of the tumors and get into the bloodstream, called metastasis...an immediate signal for more aggressive treatment...possibly preventing recurrence. The test may become available in as little as two years.

This event will not only be spectacular to participate and watch, but it will also provide funds to support 14,000 Special Olympic athletes in Northern California. Originally aired 7/17/10.

Most of us find rainy weather inconvenient, but for those without a home, it can be way more than just an inconvenience. In San Jose today when the rain began, folks started lining up outside the EHC Lifebuilders Shelter hoping for a spot to spend the night. EHC says it will work to kindle the family, but advocates for the homeless point out...state cuts and dwindling federal stimulus funds will cut some programs that help families find affordable housing.

Violence prevention is the focus of a new mentoring program which organizers launched in Richmond tonight. One idea is to get people acquainted with one another. Richmond residents of all ages were encouraged to shake hands and meet their neighbors. Organizers are calling for mentors to provide guidance to young people and encourage them to pursue education. The program is calling for "Mentoring for Martin," referring to Martin Luther King, Jr.

At the opening reception, champagne was flowing and people were bubbling with enthusiasm for the nation's first Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Museum. It's dream 25 years in the making. Now, museum co-curator Don Romesburg says the new museum will feature stories that span 100 years of gay history. Exhibits featuring the famous, such as San Francisco's slain Supervisor and activist, Harvey Milk. There are the wedding clothes of activists Del Martin and Phyllis Lyons...the first couple to wed when gay marriage briefly became legal in 2008. This museum is serving as a prism to the past and shedding light on all the colors of the rainbow. The museum holds just a fraction of the archives, so in the future; staff plans to rotate the exhibits so people can see more of the collection.

A gun show at the Cow Palace this weekend is operated by the same group that is also holding a gun show at Tucson at the same time. A Bay Area State Senator is renewing his call for such events to be banned at the state-owned property in Daly City. Visitor to the gun show today say with the resurrection this week of a proposed ban on open carry...and the news that a gunshot ban may be revived is an assault on their 2nd amendment privileges. Leno says so far he hasn't discussed the issue with Governor Jerry Brown, but he's hoping if he does reintroduce the bill...this biome it will get the governor's signature.

The American Red Cross just released their one year report on the progress being made in their Haitian efforts. The Red Cross alone, raised $479 million dollars to help support Haiti, and in the Bay Area, nearly $26million was raised, second to New York. Although, much still needs to be done to bring Haiti back to some sort of "normalcy," donations have helped provide strong temporary shelter, bring in food and help fight cholera. For a copy of their one year report, visit their website.

The WildCare Center in San Rafael is a non-profit organization for wildlife rehabilitation and environmental education. Baby season is coming up in the spring and that means the months of January and February is mating season for many animals. It's also a very active time for skunks, and they're usually noticed by humans because of their oar. WildCare does its' best to help people deal with the problems that come up from mating season. Call their hotline if you have questions or concerns about local wildlife.

A homeless census is underway right now in San Francisco. Volunteers have just begun the difficult task of trig to count the city's thousands of homeless people. Right now volunteers are spreading out across the city looking for homeless people. The city receives $18 million a year from the federal government to help pay for homeless services. The volunteers receives a pep talk from Mayor Ed Lee before hitting the streets. Two years ago, volunteers counted 6,500 homeless people. City officials say the results are a helpful tool in determining what services are needed.

Business owners at San Francisco's Ferry Building say they're seeing an increase in the number of homeless people coming inside and causing problems. Some believe there's a connection to a major city project a few blocks away. Some store owners said the increase seems to coincide with the demolition of the nearby Transbay Terminal last September. About a hundred homeless people were living in the abandoned terminal before it was demolished. The city's Homeless Services Director says most of the people who were squatting in the terminal are now off the streets and into programs...but not all. Our calls to the Ferry Building manger have not been returned. There is security, but store owners say this is a busy place and security officers can't be everywhere.

As the first African American television anchor and reporter in the western United States, Belva Davis forged a successful career to become one of the most respected journalists in television. From her birthplace in Monroe, Louisiana, to settling down in Oakland, Ca. in the 40's, Davis shares the story of her difficult childhood, to just trying to make ends meet as a young, single mother of two. Davis said yes to every opportunity that came her way, and soon found herself on television, meeting heads of states and covering some of the most explosive stirs of her time.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) requires a nationwide bi-annual homeless count in order for cities to receive federal funding. Alameda County's EveryOne Home, a non-profit organization, has gathered up volunteers to help conduct a count while interviewing the homeless. This count will help budget resources and measure their progress to end homelessness.

If you have a pet that needs to get fixed, you're in luck. The San Francisco SPCA is offering free procedures throughout February for Spay/Neuter month. The SF SPCA takes in homeless cats and dogs year round, one of them, a spunky 2-year old Chihuahua named Chirp, who was abandoned by his previous owners. The SF SPCA hopes to raise awareness about animal overpopulation facing San Francisco and to help local pet owners be part of the solution by getting their pets spayed or neutered.

Conor Greenan was looking to have an exotic holiday when he took a year off his 9 to 5 job to travel around the world. Instead, he unexpectedly found himself volunteering at the Little Princess Children's Home in war-torn Nepal, helping trafficked children reconnect with their families. He shares his story in his debut memoir, Little Princess: One Man's Promise to Bring Home the Lost Children of Nepal, in hopes of shedding light on a tragic ongoing situation for many children in Nepal.

Abortion rights sparked a protest today in Oakland. The non-profit NARAL Pro-Choice California organized today's walk around Lake Merritt...as part of a nationwide campaign on support of women's reproductive rights. Demonstrators are angry with congressional Republicans' efforts to strip federal funding for Planned Parenthood. Earlier this month, the Republican controlled house passed a spending plan that included eliminating more than $300 million in federal funding for Planned Parenthood. The organization is prohibited from using federal dollars for abortion services, but it uses federal money to provide family planning, birth control, medical and preventative services.

San Jose pot clubs got the word today that they are free to open for business tomorrow provided they pay taxes. The city has also told them "how much" to pay. There are about 100 cannabis clubs in San Jose right now, but the city has yet to fully develop a medical marijuana policy. San Jose's new policy, through Measure H, levies a monthly gross receipt tax on clubs. Today, city finance officials told owners the rate is 7%. So, when a club grosses about $143,000 - the city gets $10,000 with a $2,500 penalty for late payments. But, what upsets owners so far, is the policy addresses money, not the legality. In fact, clubs are still considered "illegal" in San Jose and paying the tax, could be seen as "incriminating" by federal authorities, who consider marijuana sales "illegal." San Jose plans to clarify legal issues with guidance from the attorney general. But until then, a showdown is brewing for April 30th, when the first tax payments are due.

Most dog owners adopt pets as either young or puppies, but many are older dogs who need homes too. To help save these senior dogs from seeing out their lives in a shelter, Sherri Franklin founded an organization called, Muttville. It aims to give old and typically undesirable dogs a "forever" home or provide hospice for those that are un-adoptable. Franklin is here with 7-year old Fifi to tell us more.
